BERRIEN COUNTY TRIAL COURT

Medical marijuana decision draws lawsuit

Winn Wolf files suit over special use permit for dispensary

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

ST. JOSEPH — A civil lawsuit filed last week at the Berrien County Courthouse questions the legality of Benton Harbor city commissioners' decision to grant a special use permit for a medical marijuana dispensary at 200 E. Main St., saying it breaks the city's ordinance.

City commissioners changed the ordinance the day after the lawsuit was filed, so the location is no longer in violation. It is unclear what effect this will have on the case.

The nine-point lawsuit was filed June 2 on behalf of Winn Wolf and his company, Wolf Management Properties LLC, which owns the Vincent Place at 185 E. Main St. It alleged that commissioners violated the city's ordinance requiring that medical marijuana facilities be at least 500 feet from places of worship. It stated that the location is less than 500 feet from the Sikh Religious Society of Southwest Michigan on Territorial Road.

On June 3, commissioners held a special meeting amending the ordinance to take out the distance requirement. State law has no requirement on how far medical marijuana facilities must be from places of worship. Commissioners left intact the requirement that medical marijuana facilities be at least 1,000 feet from schools.

The lawsuit further stated that the city violated its ordinance by not having the city's Zoning Board of Appeals consider his appeal to the dispensary's location within 15 days. The city commission is also the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Commissioners approved on April 20 a special use permit for Justice Grown of Michigan to open a medical marijuana dispensary at 200 E. Main St. The lawsuit stated that Wolf filed an appeal on May 8.

The lawsuit asks that the courts mandate that the appeal be heard and that the ZBA be ordered to reverse the city commission's approval of the special use permit. In addition, the lawsuit asked that the courts award Wolf reasonable attorney fees and any other relief deemed appropriate.

Even though the lawsuit was filed a day before the ordinance was amended, it addressed the possible amendment, stating that it was an "unlawful attempt to 'correct' Benton Harbor's failure to enforce" its current ordinance.

"Such bad faith conduct by defendants, if permitted and if given effect, will cause irreparable damage to plaintiff's by violating plaintiff's fundamental and constitutional rights and as set forth herein," it stated. "... No harm will come to defendant if the court compels defendant to follow the ordinance adopted only two years ago."

In addition, the lawsuit stated that if the dispensary is opened across the street from the Vincent Place,

'It's broken'

Fears grow about strength of U.S. voting system

By STEVE PEOPLES and CHRISTINA A. CASSIDY
Associated Press

ATLANTA — The chaos that plagued Georgia's primary this week is raising concerns about a potential broader failure of the nation's patchwork election system that could undermine the November presidential contest, political leaders and elections experts say.

With less than five months to go, fears are mounting that several battleground states are not prepared to administer problem-free elections during the pandemic.

The increasingly urgent concerns are both complex and simple: long lines disproportionately affecting voters of color in places like Atlanta with a history of voter suppression; a severe shortage of poll workers scared away by coronavirus concerns; and an emerging consensus that it could take several days after polls close on Election Day to determine a winner as battleground states struggle with an explosion of mail voting.

"We want a democracy in the United States we can showcase for the world, and right now it's broken and on full display," said Kristen Clarke, president and executive director of the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law.

Officials across the political spectrum have raised concerns, but there is a contrast in the level of urgency by party, and even by race.

Commissioners praise retiring administrator

Bill Wolf wraps up career today

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

ST. JOSEPH — Berrien County commissioners heaped praise on retiring Administrator Bill Wolf during his last meeting Thursday, saying that his commitment to the county made it a better place.

Wolf's final day at the county is today. He is 67.

WOLF

"We've been blessed ... to have you," said board Chairman Mac Elliott. "... The 25 years that I've been able to spend with you in almost day-to-day contact during that time, I really enjoyed."

Commissioner Mamie Yarbrough said she's known Wolf for many years, including when he served as a Benton Harbor city commissioner and later, as Benton Harbor's mayor.

"What I'm so proud of is the business that we've been able to do with your leadership," she said.

Wolf became the county's administrator on Jan. 1, 2005. Before that, he was the county's treasurer for eight years.

A resolution passed by the commissioners stated that when Wolf applied for the job in the fall of 2004, he said that his goal was to "be a responsive, proactive chief operating officer to the Board of Commissioners; a prudent manager of the public's trust and finances; a valued partner to the countywide elected officials; and a respected mentor, leader, and manager to our team of county employees."

"He has successfully achieved this goal and so much more in the 15 years he has served in that role and he deserves to be honored for all of his service to his community, our county, and our country," the resolution stated.

Wolf said that working as the county's administrator has been his dream job. When he includes his time in the military, he said he has served the public for 50 years.

"I can tell you that 50 years serving the public has overwhelmingly rewarded me on a personal satisfaction level," he said. "While there are always a few regrets, it has been a ... tremendous career and I can truthfully say that my time here as your county administrator has been the very best."

Alarming rise in virus cases as states roll back lockdowns

By MIKE STOBBE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — States are rolling back lockdowns, but the coronavirus isn't done with the U.S.

Cases are rising in nearly half the states, according to an Associated Press analysis, a worrying trend that could intensify as people return to work and venture out during the summer.

In Arizona, hospitals have been told to prepare for the worst. Texas has more hospitalized COVID-19 patients than at any time before. And the governor of North Carolina said recent jumps caused him to rethink plans to reopen schools or businesses.

There is no single reason for the surges. In some cases, more testing has revealed more cases. In others, local outbreaks are big enough to push statewide tallies higher. But experts think at least some are due to lifting stay-at-home orders, school and business closures, and other restrictions put in place during the spring to stem the virus's spread.

The increase in infections pulled stocks down sharply Thursday on Wall Street, dragging the Dow Jones Industrial Average more than 1,800 points lower and giving the S&P 500 its worst day in nearly three months. The infections deflated recent optimism that the economy could recover quickly from its worst crisis in decades.

The virus is also gradually fanning out.

VIRUS

"It is a disaster that spreads," said Dr. Jay Butler, who oversees coronavirus response work at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "It's not like there's an entire continental seismic shift and everyone feels the shaking all at once."

That is also happening globally. Places that suffered early on such as China, Italy and Spain have calmed down but Brazil, India and other countries that were spared initially are seeing large increases. The world is seeing more than 100,000 newly-confirmed cases every day, according to data from Johns Hopkins University.

The virus first landed on the U.S. coasts, carried by international travelers infected abroad. For months, the epicenter was in northeastern states. More recently, the biggest increases have been in the South and the West.

The AP analyzed data compiled by The COVID Tracking Project, a volunteer organization that collects coronavirus testing data in the United States. The analysis found that in 21 states as of Monday, the rolling seven-day average of new cases per capita was higher than the average seven days earlier.

Some worry the situation may get worse as social distancing restrictions lift and more people gather. One concern is that large recent racial justice protests across the country might spark at least some spread of the virus.

Another: President Donald Trump this week said he's planning to hold rallies that may draw thousands of people. He will hold them in four states – Arizona, Florida, Oklahoma, and Texas. All of them are among the states with rising cases identified in the AP analysis.

Here's what's driving increases in some of the states with notable upticks:

Arizona

Republican Gov. Doug Ducey ended Arizona's stay-at-home order on May 15 and eased restrictions on businesses. Arizona residents who were cooped up for six weeks flooded Phoenix-area bar districts, ignoring social distancing guidelines.

The state began seeing a surge of new cases and hospitalizations about 10 days later.

"It seems pretty clear to me that what we're seeing is directly related to the end of the stay-at-home order," said Will Humble, executive director of the Arizona Public Health Association.

It wasn't just that the order ended: There were no requirements to wear face masks, no major increases in contact tracing to spot and stop evolving outbreaks, and no scale-up of infection control at nursing homes, he said.

"Those are missed opportunities that, if implemented today, could still make a big difference," said Humble, a former director of the state Department of Health Services.

Democratic Rep. Ruben Gallego has criticized the governor for failing to highlight the "seriousness of the growing public health emergency."

Testing has been increasing in Arizona, which raises the chance of finding new cases. But the proportion of tests coming back positive has also been on the rise.

The AP analysis found Arizona had a rolling average of fewer than 400 new cases a day at the time the shutdown was lifted, but it shot up two weeks later and surpassed 1,000 new cases a day by early this week. Hospitalizations have also risen dramatically, hitting the 1,200 mark last week.

The state also passed another grim milestone last week, recording its 1,000th death.

Meanwhile Arizona hospitals reported they were at 83 percent of capacity Tuesday, which could force the cancellation of elective surgeries. An executive order Ducey issued in April said hospitals wanting to resume elective surgeries had to have at least 20 percent of their beds available.

North Carolina

In North Carolina, more testing plus more people out and about during reopening seem to be the main drivers of recent case upticks, said Kimberly Powers, an associate professor of epidemiology at the University of North Carolina.

On Saturday, the state recorded its highest single-day increase, with 1,370. While testing has grown in the last two weeks, so has the rate of tests coming back positive.

"These trends moving in the wrong direction is a signal we need to take very seriously," said North Carolina's top health official, Mandy Cohen, who along with Democratic Gov. Roy Cooper has urged the public to take precautions to protect themselves.

But some state residents are not on board.

"I think they should start opening stuff a little bit more," said Jason Denton, an electrician from Greenville who said one of his main concerns was getting to the gym.

"That's like my therapy," he said.

Texas

Few states are rebooting faster than Texas, where hospitalizations surged past 2,100 on Wednesday for the first time during the pandemic. That's a 42 percent increase in patients since Memorial Day weekend, when beachgoers swarmed Texas' coastline and a water park near Houston opened to big crowds in defiance of Republican Gov. Greg Abbott's orders.

Texas' percentage of tests coming back positive has also jumped to levels that are among the nation's highest. State officials point to hot spots at meatpacking plants and prisons in rural counties, where thousands of new cases have cropped up, but have not offered explanations for a rise in numbers elsewhere.

Abbott, who has recently begun wearing a mask in public, has shown no intention of pumping the brake on reopening a state where protesters in May pressured him to speed up the timeline on getting hair salons back in business.

On Friday, Texas is set to lift even more restrictions and let restaurant dining rooms reopen at nearly full capacity.

Wolf said that he has spent more than 17 hours with the county's next administrator, Brian Dissette, over the past week to introduce him to department heads and to visit the county's facilities and parks. Dissette is currently manager of South Haven.

Wolf said that half of that time he also spent with Mike Henry, who will serve as interim administrator until Dissette starts on July 1.

"It's been a pretty concentrated but very effective week in getting (Dissette) and Mike Henry oriented to the county," Wolf said.

He said he doesn't know what he's going to do in retirement.

"This truly is a job that I will look back at forever with tremendous fondness, whatever the future may hold for me," he said.

BH mulls garbage collection options

Commission considering switch to in-house collection service

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

BENTON HARBOR — Benton Harbor city commissioners may consider handling the city's garbage service in-house, possibly at Monday's meeting.

They discussed the possibility during the city's Public Safety Committee meeting Wednesday.

Citizen representative Ben Bowers, ordinance officer with Benton Township, said the township has successfully been picking up its own trash for years, and the department only has three people in it. When someone goes on vacation, he said workers from the township's Public Works Department fill in.

Bowers said it only takes four days for the workers to pick up township trash, and the township covers 36 square miles, versus the city's 4.5 square miles. On the fifth day, he said they mow in the summer and take the day off to save the township some money in the winter.

Commissioner Ron Singleton, who chairs the committee, said the city pays a lot of money for Wecycle Industrial Sanitation to pick up the trash and for other contractors to clean up dump sites in the city.

Singleton said that when people move, they often have to pay someone to take away the big items of trash that Wecycle won't pick up. But many times, he said that instead of taking the big items to the dump, the items end up in an alley or ditch.

"Once we're in control, we won't have that because people will have a way to get rid of stuff," he said. "... I believe we'd have a cleaner city."

Singleton said he called around and ran some numbers and he believes the city will save money by picking up its own trash.

Wecycle was given a three-year contract to pick up the city's residential trash. That contract started Oct. 1, 2017.

An internal conflict regarding who owns the company led to trash not being picked up several days last November.

Commissioner Duane Seats said he agrees with bringing garbage service in-house.

"We need to do something different and invest in ourselves," he said.

Commissioner Sharon Henderson believes city commissioners can end the contract with Wecycle at any time, since it is her belief that Wecycle breached the contract.

Budget chairs: Lift July deadline; Senate wants fed help

By DAVID EGGERT
Associated Press

LANSING — Key Republican lawmakers on Thursday backed legislation that would waive a requirement that the Legislature pass the next state budget in less than three weeks, citing uncertainty over a major shortfall caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Stamas, of Midland, said he would push for quick passage of the Democratic-sponsored bill, two weeks after the state budget director said the budget timeline would have to be different. It would, for one year, lift the new July 1 deadline by which legislators must send Gov. Gretchen Whitmer a spending plan for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1.

House Appropriations Committee Chairman Shane Hernandez, of Port Huron, also supported waiting to resolve the 2020-21 budget as long as discussions continue among the House, Senate and administration on allocating initial federal COVID-19 rescue funding and addressing the current budget deficit.

Stamas noted a three-month delay in the state's income tax deadline, to July 15, and the scheduling of a rare revenue-estimating meeting for August as Michigan confronts a nearly $6.3 billion hole over this budget year and next.

"We need more time to put forward a constructive budget," he said.

The earliest it could be fully completed is late August, Stamas said, though he hopes to potentially enact an education budget sooner.

Also Thursday, the GOP-led Senate embraced calls by Whitmer and other Democrats for Congress to help the state, schools and municipalities address revenue shortfalls from the economic shutdown. The resolution, approved on a voice vote, urges Congress to give the state flexibility to use $3 billion in federal relief funds to alleviate "dramatic cuts" – not just to cover costs directly associated with the pandemic – but stops short of pushing for the approval of another round of aid.

Stamas said he "wouldn't say no" to more federal help, but "we can't count on that." Hernandez said he is "far more open" to asking for flexibility with earlier rescue money than he is to seeking additional funding.

K-12 school districts, which start their budgets July 1 – three months earlier than the state – are confronting a $1.2 billion shortfall in Michigan's school aid fund in the current fiscal year and a $1.1 billion gap next year along with additional virus-related costs.

"They are being asked to make incredibly tough decisions at this very moment," said Sen. Winnie Brinks, a Grand Rapids Democrat. "Increasing flexibility when using CARES Act dollars will help mitigate drastic cuts that our schools and communities are facing."

Thousands without power after storms sweep through Michigan

DETROIT (AP) — About 290,000 homes and businesses were without electricity Thursday in Michigan after thunderstorms barreled through the state, downing hundreds of trees and power lines.

DTE Energy said about 137,000 of its customers in southeast Michigan were without service as of 6 a.m. after about 90,000 had power restored following Wednesday's latest round of storms.

Consumers Energy crews were trying to restore power to about 151,000 customers. About 240,000 lost service from the start of the storms on Tuesday evening, the utility said.

The storms were remnants of Tropical Storm Cristobal, which moved from the Gulf of Mexico north into the Midwest – causing flooding and damage along the way – before continuing into Canada.

In Michigan, damage was scattered throughout the state. High winds tipped two semitrailers on US-127 in Gratiot County, The Detroit News reported. A church roof was peeled away in Sanilac County.

New this year is the Visual & Performing Arts Camp. This program, scheduled for 8:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. from Aug. 3-7, is designed with a "choose your own adventure" focus with offerings in instrumental music, vocal music, dance, drama, art and creative writing.

Part of each day will be spent in the LMC Fab Lab making non-traditional musical instruments to debut, along with other products of participants' creativity, at a public exhibition on 7:30 p.m., Aug. 7 in Hanson Theatre. No audition or portfolio are required.

The workshop is for people ages 13-18. It costs $200, but scholarships are available.

The Make Your Own Instrument Camp is program where participants can use their imagination and skills to create their own unique instrument. This camp runs 9 a.m. to noon from Aug. 3-6.

The camp is for people ages 8 and older. It costs $139.

The Ukulele Camp gives participants a chance to design, build, decorate, string and play their own ukulele. This camp runs 9 a.m. to noon on Aug. 10-12.

The camp is available for people ages 8 and older. It costs $109.

To enroll or apply for these non-credit arts experiences, visit www.lakemichigancollege.edu/camps.

If it becomes necessary to alter program dates and registrants cannot participate, or programs are canceled, refunds will be granted.

Social distancing protocols will be in place throughout the summer. Information regarding LMC's safety protocols can be found on the college's COVID-19 webpage.

HOROSCOPE

By EUGENIA LAST

FRIDAY, JUNE 12

Take hold of your life. Observe what others do and say and be ready to counter anything that doesn't fit into your schedule. Relying on yourself and keeping your distance from those using persuasive tactics to entice will determine how well you do this year. Stick to your beliefs.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) A friendly gesture will have an alternative motive attached. Be careful not to sign up to do someone else's dirty work. Protect your reputation, position and status.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Share your ideas. The contributions made will prompt a positive change in the way you move forward. A chance to turn something you enjoy doing into a profit looks promising.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't participate if you have reservations about what someone else is doing. Call on experience to help you decide where best to put your time and energy. Romance is encouraged.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A change will energize you. Delve into something you find exciting and fit it into your daily routine. A heart-to-heart talk will help to rectify an emotional situation. Make health a priority.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Stick to a budget and live within your means. When uncertain, stay put. Focus on making physical changes that will boost your confidence. Love is featured.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Expand your mind, your interests and your friendships. A positive change you make will enhance your relationship with someone you want to get to know better. A creative pursuit will pay off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Leave nothing to chance. Cover your back and don't offer information to anyone prying into your affairs. A steady pace forward will bring the best return. Nurture a meaningful relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A change of plans will keep you moving in a direction that offers something new and exciting. Be prepared to adapt as you go, and you will get good results.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Personal growth begins with you. Look at your current setup, consider what will make it better and concentrate on moving toward your destination of choice. Romance will enhance your life.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be careful with whom you share information and how you treat the ones you love. If you take someone for granted, you can expect to be treated the same in return.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Don't be fooled by what someone else says or does. Be confident and take the path that suits you. You are responsible for your happiness. Be a leader, not a follower.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Use intelligence when faced with a situation that requires you to make a choice. Don't let fear set in or cause you to waffle when you should be decisive.

Fitness trackers offer an abridged analysis of sleep patterns

Elizabeth Ko & Eve Glazier
Ask the Doctors

DEAR DOCTORS: I understand how my fitness tracker counts my steps and measures my heart rate, but supposedly it can say how well I sleep. How can it do that, and is that sort of data even accurate?

DEAR READER: We've seen a boom in the popularity of health tracking devices in recent years. A poll conducted last year found that 1 in 3 Americans has tried out some form of health tech, and that close to 20 percent of us now use a digital fitness tracking device each day. Depending on the specific device, wearables can count the number of steps we take each day, log our heart rate, analyze stress, count how many flights of stairs we have climbed, pinpoint the amount of time we've spent being active, estimate how many calories we've burned, measure distance traveled or use UV sensors to measure sun exposure. And, yes, a growing number of devices now follow us into the bedroom to monitor and analyze our sleep.

Many wearables, like the one you use, include a sleep mode. Again, depending on the device, they may offer information about how long you sleep, or about the quality of that sleep. They do this using sensors known as accelerometers, which can detect not only when someone is moving but also the speed and direction of that motion. This data, along with the heart rate information that the device collects, is extrapolated into sleep analysis. Some trackers even claim to be able to quantify how much time has been spent in the three major phases of sleep – light sleep, deep sleep and REM sleep.

It's important to note that for accurate sleep analysis, you need an overnight stay at a sleep lab. There, electrodes are placed on the face, scalp, chest and limbs to digitally collect and record a range of activities in both the brain and the body. The information that goes into analyzing your sleep includes breathing, physical motion, muscle tone, eye movement, heart rate and rhythms, and brain wave activity. Fitness trackers, by contrast, are limited to the motion and heart rate data that they are able to collect, which is then parsed by an algorithm. Sleep experts are concerned that someone with a sleep disorder who relies on the data from a fitness tracker may inadvertently be reassured that all is well. The flip side is that someone with no sleep problems at all may become worried about data that isn't necessarily accurate.

The bottom line is that a fitness tracker with a sleep mode can be good at letting you know how long you were motionless, how often you were restless and how many times you got up during the night. However, it's not information that reliably translates into sleep quantity or sleep quality. Anyone who thinks they may have a sleep disorder, or who wants to improve the quality of their sleep, should first check with their health care provider. Then, if it's appropriate, a night in a sleep lab may be the next step.

Is there any hope for daughter and her less ambitious boyfriend?

Carolyn Hax

DEAR CAROLYN: My 26-year-old daughter is generally happy in her two-year relationship, but during the pandemic has become frustrated with her boyfriend's lack of motivation.

She is a strong-willed, type A personality. She has a postgraduate degree and a good job, and is easily motivated to make herself and the world a better place.

Her boyfriend is less ambitious and suits her personality well. He can calm her down and support her but is not a pushover. He is close to his family and has good values. When they met, he partied a lot and didn't have a full-time job, but has since largely completed his high school courses and works full time at a job he likes. He loves to cook and pampers her with delicious meals. We call him the "daughter whisperer": One time when she was extremely upset, he took a towel out of the dryer and wrapped it around her. It shocked her into a calmer frame of mind. He's really quite brilliant.

During COVID, my daughter has been working from home while he has been laid off, with government benefits to cover his half of the expenses. She is frustrated that he doesn't do more with his free time. She would like him to get up early with her, study for a couple of hours, work out, drink less and generally be more productive.

I am worried she is asking him to change his character rather than his habits, and that the only way they will be happy is for her to accept him the way he is. She argues that people make compromises in relationships all the time and he should try harder to be more motivated. Is there any hope for them? – Worried WORRIED: That towel story, wow. It's genius in nurturing, which is a kind of intelligence too often devalued, especially in men.

Your daughter herself devalues it. The type-A ranks she apparently respects more, though, would likely be better staffed and more dazzlingly productive if they made more room in their lives and world views for the nurturing types.

So we're of like minds there. You have my full agreement, too, that couples' happiness depends on as-is acceptance.

And I will take a special paragraph to express my advisory dismay at the notion he should "try harder to be more motivated" to please her out of some universal relationship duty. She chooses her actions, he chooses his, period. Then they either choose each other or not. Compromise is useless unless it's freely given and leaves the essential self intact.

If she loves him, and if she loves herself, then she will quit acting as if some other reality is owed to her. That belief – "If you loved me, you'd change" – is the runway to righteous coupled suffering.

But.

There's always a but.

Assuming he's as great as you say – you don't live with him, remember – it still doesn't matter one bit if he isn't what she wants. She can throw away utter perfection in an overt quest for misery. Her prerogative.

And your heartbreak, alas. But the best support comes from people who know their place and know what they don't know. Advise her generally against trying to change people, if she asks, but otherwise zip it and let this play out.

BRIDGE

Aristotle claimed, "All human actions have one or more of these seven causes: chance, nature, compulsion, habit, reason, passion and desire."

In bridge, we are wary of playing with only seven trumps, especially when they are divided 4-3. This is called a Moysian fit after Sonny Moyse Jr, who used to edit The Bridge World magazine and wrote several articles about it.

Yesterday, South played in a 4-3 heart fit that did not go well. Today, South is in a Moysian four spades. How should that fare?

Note that five of either minor has three top losers: two spades and one heart. Four hearts by West can be defeated if South gains a trump promotion on the third round of diamonds from North.

Declarer has tricks galore if he can draw trumps, but they are not 3-3.

At the table, West led the diamond two. Declarer won on the board and ran the spade jack to West's king. Now West had to shift to hearts, the defenders playing two rounds to tap the dummy. Then East takes the next spade and plays another heart to take the contract down two.

Instead of a heart, West led a second diamond. Declarer won with his king and played a trump to the 10. When that held, South continued with the diamond ace, knowing that West had another diamond because he would have gone high-low with a doubleton. East ruffed, and South overruffed. After a club to the jack, East ruffed the next diamond with his last trump, the ace, and South discarded a heart. East cashed the heart ace, but South had the rest.

Dow sinks 1,800 as virus cases rise

By ALEX VEIGA and DAMIAN J. TROISE
AP Business Writers

Stocks fell sharply Thursday on Wall Street as coronavirus cases in the U.S. increased again, deflating recent optimism for a quick economic recovery and raising more doubts about how long the market's scorching comeback can last.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average sank more than 1,800 points and the S&P 500 dropped 5.9 percent, its worst day since mid-March, when stocks went through repeated harrowing falls as the virus lockdowns began.

Many market watchers have been saying that the comeback in the market since late March was overdone and did not reflect the dire state of an economy in its worst crisis in decades. The S&P 500 rallied 44.5 percent between late March and Monday, erasing most of its losses tied to the pandemic.

The selling comes as coronavirus cases rise in the U.S., with some of the increase likely tied to the reopening of businesses and the lifting of stay-at-home orders. Cases are climbing in nearly half the states, according to an Associated Press analysis, a worrying trend that could intensify as people return to work and venture out during the summer.

"Not surprisingly, a lack of preventative behavior has led to a resurgence in COVID-19 cases around the country, and the stock market is having another gut check," said Chris Zaccarelli, chief investment officer for Independent Advisor Alliance.

Investor optimism for a speedy recovery was also dimmed by the Federal Reserve, which warned Wednesday that the road to recovery from the worst downturn in decades would be long and vowed to keep rates low for the foreseeable future.

Those factors, along with the recent run-up in stock prices, set the stage for the wave of selling Thursday.

The S&P 500 dropped 188.04 points to 3,002.10, its biggest decline since March 16. The Dow skidded 1,861.82 points, or 6.9 percent, to 25,128.17. The Nasdaq composite, which rose above 10,000 for the first time a day earlier, lost 527.62 points, or 5.3 percent, to 9,492.73.

Small company stocks continued to bear the brunt of the selling, a signal that investors are becoming more pessimistic about a broad recovery in the economy. The Russell 2000 index fell 111.17 points, or 7.6 percent, to 1,356.22. European and Asian markets also fell.

The St. Joseph School Board accepted the bid of Whirlpool Corp. to purchase Washington School for $250,000. There was only one other bid of $50,000.

Whirlpool will use the building for offices, a company spokesman said. The school is located at 709 Main Street, near downtown.

The board also approved a five-year lease of North Lincoln Elementary School to the Berrien County Intermediate School District. Both buildings were closed at the end of the 1982-83 school year.

VOTING

Democrats want to send billions of dollars to overburdened state and local election systems and expand in-person early voting and universal no-excuse mail balloting. Republicans, reluctant to inject the federal government into state elections, have resisted such efforts and instead call on local elections officials, who in urban areas are often Democrats, to fix the problems themselves.

President Donald Trump is also fighting states' plans to expand voting by mail, raising repeated concerns with no evidence about voter fraud.

Civil rights activist Al Sharpton said he has lost confidence in the nation's voting system, particularly across states where federal protections that ensured minority voters weren't disenfranchised have been swept away.

"You're almost back to the Confederates against the Union," Sharpton said.

He offered a simple message to people of color and those who run elections this fall: "If you do not vote and protect the vote, then you are helping to keep the knee on our necks."

Election officials are expressing optimism as they scramble to address glaring problems. Amid continued pandemic concerns, many don't have enough poll workers to staff voting sites, the capacity to train new workers in states featuring new equipment or the ability to efficiently process the surge in mail ballots.

The challenges have led to extraordinarily long lines, particularly in urban areas.

The final Las Vegas voter wasn't able to cast a ballot until 3 a.m. Wednesday, eight hours after polls were supposed to close. Some Atlanta voters brought lawn chairs to wait in lines that exceeded five hours.

Wait times of two hours or more were reported in recent weeks across Philadelphia, Milwaukee and Washington, D.C.

Beyond lines, the mail voting boom has caused unprecedented reporting delays.

Pennsylvania officials were still counting mail ballots from the state's June 2 election on June 11. Because of a court order, Wisconsin didn't begin to release results of its April 7 primary until six days after polls closed.

Former Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, a Republican, said he's confident in the state's voting system and blames any issues on the "incompetence" of municipal election officials. The criticism was in line with that of Georgia's chief elections officer, a Republican who blamed the election leaders of two Democratic-controlled counties for most of the problems in Tuesday's primary.

That highlights a complicated reality across America. Each state has its own set of complicated ballot-access laws, adopted by the party in power at the statehouse and implemented by local governments with little to no federal oversight.

Ohio Secretary of State Frank LaRose, a Republican, said he's working to ensure Ohio has adequate poll workers. He's tweaking a program allowing high school seniors to be poll workers, encouraging companies to give workers a paid day off and advocating state agencies that don't already offer days off for poll workers to do so.

LaRose condemned those in both parties who have warned of voting challenges.

PERMIT

Wolf will lose at least one tenant – Edward Jones – which has been in the building for 15 years.

Attached to the lawsuit is a letter from Bryan Tutton of Edward Jones, stating that when a marijuana dispensary moves near one of the offices, it is corporate policy to move the office due to the negative impact it has had in states like Colorado.

When contacted by phone, Wolf said he has managed the Vincent Place since 1988 and bought the building Jan. 1. He said it was his understanding that a medical marijuana dispensary could not be put at 200 E. Main St. because it is next to the Benton Harbor Library and is less than 500 feet from a place of worship. He said he probably wouldn't have bought the building had he known the ordinance would be changed.

"If the city can guarantee that the spot will only sell medical marijuana and not recreational marijuana, I won't like it, but I can live with it," he said.

Commissioners have opted out of allowing recreational marijuana being sold in the city, but are considering opting back in.

City officials were unavailable for comment.
